

Psalm 15

What man, O Lord, can dwell within Your tent,
Whose days upon Your holy hill are spent?
The righteous man, who walks the blameless way,
Who in his heart has naught but truth to say,
Who on his tongue is found no wicked lie,
Who does no wrong to those who pass him by.
He won't betray a true, beloved friend,
But scorn upon a villain he will send,
And honor give to one who serves the Lord.
No cost to him will ever break his word,
His money loaned demands no great return.
He takes no bribes, lest innocents should burn.
The man who does these things will never fall:
Unshaken, he will dwell in God's great hall.

Jonathan Sanford